AIM

To deepen participants' understanding of the intersections between gender and labour, with particular attention to how labour regimes, institutions, and policies operate differently across regions. The programme seeks to strengthen participants' capacity to analyse women's work, rights, and access to social protection, and to engage in research, advocacy, and collective action that advance equitable and dignified work for women.

OBJECTIVES

- To develop a conceptual and empirical understanding of gender and labour, including informality, precarity, care work, migration, and social reproduction, across diverse regional contexts.
- To examine labour regimes, institutions, and policies through a gender lens, and critically assess how their design and implementation shape women's work, rights, and access to social protection across regions.
- To analyse structural and institutional barriers to women's labour rights and entitlements, including issues of recognition, valuation of work, and exclusion from formal protections.
- To strengthen participants' capacities for gender-responsive research, policy engagement, advocacy, and collective action aimed at advancing equitable and dignified work for women.
