AIM

The programme aims to strengthen the capacity of key stakeholders to understand and address the challenges faced by workers in the urban informal economy and migrant workers through more effective, inclusive and rights-based approaches to governance, labour protection and welfare delivery.

OBJECTIVES

- To develop an understanding of the urban informal economy and its role in employment, livelihoods and economic growth, with particular attention to informal workers and migrant labour.
- To understand the key challenges faced by informal and migrant workers in accessing decent work, labour rights, social security and essential urban services.
- To familiarise participants with the key institutional mechanisms for worker registration, portability of entitlements, welfare delivery and grievance redressal.
- To explore practical and inclusive approaches for strengthening governance, protection and welfare delivery for informal and migrant workers in urban areas.

COURSE PROFILE

India's expanding urban economy relies substantially on informal and migrant labour, across sectors such as construction, domestic work, street vending, waste management, transport, manufacturing, hospitality and emerging platform-based work. Yet many workers continue to face challenges in accessing decent employment, labour protections, social security, housing, healthcare and other essential urban services.

This three-day training programme will reflect these issues through an integrated labour, migration and urban governance perspective. It will cover the urban informal economy and labour markets; migration and mobility; labour rights and decent work; occupational safety; social security and welfare delivery; portability of entitlements; urban livelihoods and basic services; and emerging forms of informal and platform work. Particular attention will be given to the institutional interface between labour administration and urban governance, including the role of ULBs in identifying workers, facilitating access to schemes and services, and strengthening the last-mile delivery.

METHODOLOGY

The programme will use a participatory and practice-oriented approach combining expert-led lectures, interactive sessions, case study-based learning and group discussions, and experience sharing.
