ILO Convention 156 on Workers with Family Responsibilities (1981): Promoting Work Family Reconciliation in achieving Gender Equality

Work and family life balance are central in understanding the employment dilemma in the context of a highly segmented labour market and persisting gender inequalities in the world of work. It is also witnessed that work and family reconciliation policies have contributed to higher female employment rates and have encouraged women with younger children to participate in labour market thereby reducing the gender gaps in the labour market to a large extent. Women, much more than men, devote a significant part of their time to unpaid household work, which includes caring for children, sick household members, and the elderly. Time-use surveys of 26 OECD countries and three OECD enhanced engagement countries (China, India and South Africa) show that women devote, on average, more than twice as much time to household work as men. In this context, the adoption of ILO Convention 156 Workers with Family Responsibilities adopted in the year 1981 assumes paramount importance. The Convention recognizes the problems of workers with family responsibilities and reiterates for a need to create effective equality of opportunity and treatment as between men and women workers with family responsibilities and between such workers and other workers.

The declining female labour force participation in India as reflected in labour force surveys conducted by the National Sample Survey Office has become a serious concern for policy makers, academia, social scientists and various international organisations. One of the reasons of low participation of women in the labour force is the non-recognition of a number of economic activities carried out by them (such as cooking, collection of fuel and fodder, house and utensils cleaning etc.). Moreover, a variety of social and family related constraints compel women to confine themselves to household activities at their prime working age. Many working women make compromises necessary to fit paid work around the family and experience the anxiety and stress of combining these roles.

In this context, the provisions of Convention 156 assume paramount significance to redesign policies for effective work life balance that enable women to continue and sustain in the labour market. The Convention recommends that either parent should have the possibility, within a period immediately following maternity leave, of obtaining leave of absence (parental leave), without relinquishing employment and with rights resulting from employment being safeguarded. Besides other policy measures, it advocates flexible arrangements as regards working schedules, rest periods and holidays and regulation of the terms and conditions of employment of part-time, temporary and home workers. It can be reiterated that the Convention and its recommendations will be useful to redesigning policies in the direction of developing flexible hours and flexible services so that it enables women to combine paid work with their family responsibilities and also helps in promoting greater gender equality in the household. However, the Convention is yet to be ratified by the Government of India.
Industrial relations are complex and social relations between individuals and groups in industry conditioned by the social, cultural, economic and political milieu within which a society functions. These relations are undergoing rapid changes during the past few years. Labour administrators play a very vital role in regulation of these relations. However, this would be effective only when the stakeholders are well conversant with the concept of industrial relations, aware of the changes taking place and possess required skill for making required interventions.

It is in this background, at the initiative of the Director General, VVGNLI and Chief Labour Commissioner, Shri P.P. Mitra, the Institute organized a one-day workshop on 01 November, 2014 at its campus at Noida. During the workshop, the participants were mainly addressed by Dr. P.D. Shenoy, former Union Labour Secretary. The workshop had two technical sessions. During the first session Dr. Shenoy explained to the participants in detail the concept and recent trends in industrial relations. During the second session he dealt with the techniques and skills required for managing industrial relations with the help of number of examples and case studies based on his long and rich experience as Labour Commissioner, Govt. of Karnataka, Managing Director, Karnataka State Road Transport Corporation and Chief Labour Commissioner. The workshop was attended by senior officers from Labour Service from various parts of the country. Dr. Sanjay Upadhyaya, Fellow, VVGNLI was the workshop co-ordinator.

Conditions of Employment, Work and Service of Faculty in Private Engineering Colleges in India

Technical education plays an extremely important role in growth of human resources, enhancement of industrial productivity and improvement in quality of life. One of the key components of technical education system in India comprises of a large number of private engineering institutions spread over various parts of the country. As per the latest available sources there are approximately 3200 private engineering institutions / colleges in India engaged in imparting Under Graduate and Post Graduate level education in various branches of engineering. In addition to providing employment to a large number of persons engaged in various non-teaching categories, these institutions are the source of employment to almost 3.5 - 4 lakh technically qualified persons engaged as faculty.

These faculty members perform the most important role in the smooth and efficient functioning of the technical institutions they are engaged in. Their level of satisfaction with their overall conditions of work and service assumes paramount importance. There is a comprehensive regulatory framework in our country in the form of detailed AICTE Guidelines and Legal measures under various labour legislations for safeguarding the interest of the faculty members engaged in these institutions covering aspects like salary, conditions of work and social security, etc. However, the realities prevailing at the grass roots level reveal that majority of these provisions are not effectively implemented in large number of cases for various reasons. It is in this context, the researcher has undertaken the present study. Based on the analysis of primary data collected from private engineering colleges from various parts of the country, the study gives a vivid account of the major issues and concerns of faculty in terms of their condition of employment, work and service. The study also offers a number of suggestions to address these issues.
