AIM

Across the globe, gender gaps in the world of work persist both in developed and developing countries. Women continue to experience lower labour participation, higher unemployment and under-employment, vulnerability, informality and precarious employment compared to men. Though gaps are slowly narrowing, gender wage gaps also persist. Such disadvantages faced by women are caused by entrenched patriarchal social norms which continue to shape labour markets, and are very slow to change. Against this backdrop, this training programme addresses the gender dimensions of the global labour market, focusing on unemployment, vulnerable employment and overall sectoral changes during the last two decades. The training also addresses gender dimensions of mega factors, such as demographic transition, globalization, environmental change, and technological change and innovation, which have a profound impact on the future world of work..
